

October 22, 2015

ALL IS LOST

All is Lost is an intense psychological tale that has only one character played by Robert Redford. He is lost at sea in a ship with a hole in it and he is racing against time. What makes this film so special is the emotion in Redford's face as he struggles alone against all odds to save himself and the effect that each moment brings.

His will to survive and the means he uses to keep going are really moving. All is Lost is a riveting portrait of a man facing mortality. The ship is a great metaphor for life and the struggles we face in it, all the while knowing that eventually we will lose and surrender to whatever is to come.

All is Lost is an intimate film that will make you ask yourself: what would I do in that situation? When would we give up, and what would need to happen for us to let go of life? The ocean as both enemy and savior represent the lack of malice in the natural world and the cruel reality that it is – a series of events that leads to what becomes our fate. Redford was nominated for an Oscar for his performance. He didn't win, but he was clearly deserving of the recognition. You can find this on your streaming sites. It is not in theaters, but I wanted this outstanding work to get more attention.

I give All is Lost five golden tickets.

